

a few notes

Topic: Chances are your black colleagues are not okay

Daily Envision Employee Check-in

Hosted by Dr. Stefanie Simmons

If there ever was a time for us to do a national reset to address our cultural pandemic. It is now. The past few days, weeks, and months have been difficult. There are two tales of quarantine. One that involves working from home, being jobless at home, or being an essential worker navigating through the difficulties of this crisis. And the other tale is being of color especially black and having to deal with the challenges of this crisis while trying to stay alive because there is a social injustice because of the color of your skin. Over the last few months, Black people have not only watched their friends and family members die at higher rates from the coronavirus, they have also watched people who look like them be gunned down while going for a jog, be murdered in their homes, threatened while bird watching in Central Park, and mercilessly choked on camera. In today's employee check in- we discuss an article written on Yahoo.com. It challenges us to check in on our black colleagues and view the crisis that is happening from their perspective.

Click here for related Source#1